Music becomes dramatic then fades out

Location: Car

Music on car radio, Flashbacks, by Alma Mater <https://almamaterpa.bandcamp.com/>

*Background: Car engine, driving, turn signal clicks
Putting the car in park. Turning off engine.*

Typing number on phone. We only hear one side of the conversation.

Alan (with pauses noted in parenthesis)

- Hi Ethan. (3)
- Yeah, I'm okay. I'm a little early, so I'm just sitting here. (5)
- If it was good news, he would have told me over the phone. (5)
- I know. I hope so too. (2)
- How's your drive going? (5)
- At least it's not as hot today. (4)
- Yeah. (4)
- Hey, are you seeing the lights in the sky to the west? (2)
- Just to the right of the sun, from here. (4)
- Oh wow! They're like shooting stars. Bright. Maybe the mountains are in your way. (7)

Opening car door, getting out of car

- There's another one! Wow! That one was bright. Like a fireball. (3)

Strange high pitched sound.

- Gasp of pain (3)
- Nah, no, I'm okay. It was just another dizzy spell. I got out of the car too fast. (4)
- I've never seen anything like this in the daytime. (2)

- It's so bright. I wonder if a satellite is breaking up. (3)

Strange high pitched sound, growing in intensity

- Anguished gasp of pain (3)
- (labored) Ethan. This might be worse than I thought. (4)

Getting back into car

- I'm sitting in the car again. (2)
- I don't think I can walk into the doctor's office. Would you give them a call? (4)
- I'm getting a weird tunnel vision. (3)
- I'll see you tonight. (3)
- I love you.

Strange high pitched sound is all that can be heard

They are a local alternative punk/rock band from the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area of Pennsylvania. They've given me permission to play the full track of Flashbacks at the end of the credits. If you enjoy it, head to bandcamp.com to listen to their other work. I found their music long after my story was written, but it fit like a glove.

I hope you've enjoyed learning about Alan. He has a condition called Tinnitus, which I also share. His condition is a little more severe for the sake of the plot. It will take him someplace surprising next time.
